

MILLIONAIRES AND THEIR MANSIONS.

An English Opinion. One of the most remarkable things about American millionaires is the small enjoyment that they appear to derive from the magnificent mansions which they consider necessary to construct as a public manifestation of their wealth.

"Chile's Stanchest Friend and Ally." The Panama Star and Herald of recent date has a sensible editorial on Chile's relations with the United States. Certainly Chileans might better afford to listen to advice from disinterested Columbians than their neighbors and well wishers.

In Venice. A night in Venice, languid skies That arched above the Bridge of Sighs: Soft strains of love from some guitar, Perchance 'neath beauty's rose-hid bow, That, trembling, reached us from afar And stole from Time the passing hour - These I'll remember until death, Along with Luigi's garlic breath.
